Dear Ms. Whitlock,

On behalf of the students, staff, and faculty of Clemson University, I offer my deepest appreciation and gratitude to you. I heard many good comments about you and the way you presented this very important and difficult subject at our campus.

As you mentioned, HPV is common among young sexually active individuals and more awareness and prevention strategies need to be offered to college and high school students, and that is exactly what you did. You have an amazing talent to capture the attention of the audience and take them through your journey with HPV and cervical cancer. Sharing your personal story and your experience with this infection brought so much depth and value to the information you presented to our students.

I recommend you very strongly to any college campus, and I believe that meeting you and hearing your powerful story will make a big impact on the student sexual health and choices they make.

Again, thank you for talking to our students and offering your knowledge and experience to increase awareness of this very important and sensitive subject.

Sincerely,

Parvin Lewis
